

Alejandro José Jaramillo Arango was appointed EPM's Corporate Vice President of Supplies and Strategic Alliances

- As part of its business restructuring process, the EPM Group is making progress in consolidating its administrative structure with the appointment of a new top-level executive

EPM's Board of Directors, in its meeting on Tuesday, July 1, approved the appointment of Alejandro José Jaramillo Arango as EPM's new corporate vice president of Supplies and Strategic Alliances, who will assume the position through a service commission.

This appointment responds to EPM's commitment to strengthen its governance model, optimize its internal management and guarantee the sustainability of the Company facing current and future challenges in the sector.

Jaramillo Arango meets all the requirements for the position, including academic training, professional experience, current professional registration and adjustment to the defined profile. His 34-year career at EPM supports his suitability and in-depth knowledge of the Organization.

Education and experience

Alejandro José is a civil engineer from the Universidad Eafit, with specializations in Finance from the same institution and in Business Law from the Universidad Externado de Colombia.

With a 34-year career at EPM, Jaramillo Arango has held various strategic leadership positions. Among them are his management as Vice President of Business Growth, Executive Vice President of New Business, Innovation and Technology, and recently, as Corporate Director of Innovation and Emerging Businesses.

This appointment is part of the new organizational structure that began on May 12, designed to improve operational efficiency, develop the EPM Group's strategy and strengthen its governance system.

With this decision, EPM reaffirms its commitment to internal talent, operational excellence and business sustainability.